MY CARMIE BELL SINCLAIR. I stood beside a little mound,
Marked by an humble stone.
And read the soldier's epitaph,
In the one word, "Unknown!"
Net clan a name to tell of him
Who stept so sweetly there,
No name o'er which loved one could bend
To drop affection's tear.

The only one who sleeps "Unknown," Among the many brave; "Among the many brave; "Soundody a doring," though, I know, Sleeps in that saidler grave! Perchance to some passe mother's heart. He was the only joy!.— Perhaps that mother waited long To welcome house her boy!

Perhaps a gentic sister, too,
Prayed for him night and day,
And watched with anxious heart to greet.
The loved one from the fray;
Or it may be some maid, whose love,
To him was yet more dear,
Is weeping now with grief for him
Who sieces so sweetly here!

Upon each little white slab here is traced some soldier a name, And proudly do we love be tell. Their glorieus deeds to Fame ! But, shi 'lls and, indeed, to stand. Hesise this humble stone. And read so now—and know that one is sleeping all " Colmons!!"
